

David Romine is the President and Chief Executive Officer of AgileThought and a member of the company's management team. He is responsible for the overall leadership, vision, and strategic direction of AgileThought. As CEO he also maintains a focus on cultivating the collaborative and innovative culture that attracts the best technology experts and allows them to grow and thrive professionally and personally.

Starting out in software development, Dave retains a deep affection for the craft. Throughout his career, he has served in numerous technical leadership positions, from both technical and people management standpoints. His broad exposure to a variety of software projects, teams, and processes has resulted in a passion for software development process improvement. He is considered an expert in application lifecycle management disciplines, including Agile Methodologies.

Prior to co-founding AgileThought in 2004, Dave served as the Technical Architect for Market Leadership Systems for PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC), where he led the design and development of key software solutions supporting the sales and business development organization. From 1997 to 2002, Dave held various technical and leadership positions within the Global Technology Organization of Arthur Andersen LLP in Sarasota, Florida.

Dave has an extreme passion for optimizing software development processes and quickly delivering business value to clients. He firmly believes there are very good ways, and very bad ways, to deliver mobile and software solutions, and it is our responsibility to our clients to constantly seek out and refine the good ways.