

Maggie Sheldon is a philanthropic investor and entrepreneur with a substantial background in insurance. She served as an Assistant Vice President, both at Zenith Insurance, Fraud Division and AIG Claim Services, Cost Containment Division, and as a Manager at Transamerica's Medicare Integrity Program. At both AIG and Transamerica Medicare, Maggie was responsible for the formulation, implementation, and operation of the fraud divisions in compliance with governing laws and corporate direction. Throughout her career in the private sector, the divisions for which Maggie was responsible, collected and saved millions of dollars, through cost containment measures, civil and criminal recoveries and injunctions, and arrests of those committing acts of fraud and abuse against the insurers and the insureds to whom they provided service.

Prior to her insurance career, Maggie worked as a criminal investigator, most notably with the California Department of Justice, Bureau of Medi-Cal Fraud. In that position, she investigated large-scale fraud schemes perpetrated against the State's Medicaid program by program providers for criminal prosecution. Through her investigative efforts, the State's Attorney General effected many successful criminal prosecutions and recovered millions of dollars. Additionally, through her use of administrative tools such as provider de-enrollment and cease-and-desist orders, Maggie prevented an untold number of false claims from being submitted to the Medicaid program by unscrupulous providers. During her first year on the job, she was the recipient of The Department's "Investigation of the Year" award.

Maggie holds a Bachelor of Science Degree in Criminal Justice from West Chester University and a Master's Degree in Public administration from California State University, Long Beach.

Maggie is a health and wellness enthusiast who enjoys sweep rowing, running, biking and lifting in her home town of Austin, Texas.
